⚡ Kenya Power and Lighting Company (KPLC)

3️⃣ Leadership Context (KPLC)

Kenya Power and Lighting Company (KPLC) is a state-controlled utility responsible for electricity transmission, distribution, and retail across Kenya. Its leadership structure reflects both corporate governance and government oversight.

The company is led by Managing Director and CEO Joseph Siror, who oversees operational efficiency, financial sustainability, and national electrification goals. Leadership decisions are closely aligned with government energy policies and regulatory frameworks.

The Board of Directors includes representatives from the Government of Kenya, reflecting the state's majority ownership. Regulatory oversight is provided by the Energy and Petroleum Regulatory Authority (EPRA), which influences tariffs, compliance, and service standards.

Key executive roles include:

- General Manager, Commercial Services (billing, customer relations)
- General Manager, Network Management (grid operations)
- General Manager, Finance (revenue and cost control)

Leadership priorities at KPLC often center on:

- Reducing system losses (technical and commercial)
- Improving revenue collection and billing accuracy
- Expanding electricity access in rural and underserved areas
- Integrating renewable energy sources into the grid

KPLC leadership operates within a highly regulated and politically sensitive environment, requiring alignment between commercial viability and national development goals.
